

GREAT BRITAIN CANCELS PLANS FOR A CRUISER

Brings Her Navy Building Program Down to Fifteen

NOW HAS ELEVEN

Curtailment is Welcomed in Conference Circles Today

By Harry R. Flory

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

LONDON, Feb. 1.—The British admiralty has cancelled plans for another 10,000 ton cruiser, it was learned today, thus bringing Great Britain's navy building program definitely down to fifteen cruisers of that type in accordance with the agreement of President Hoover and Premier MacDonald.

This was revealed in a written reply of First Lord of the Admiralty A. V. Alexander to a question put to him in the House of Commons as to exactly what Britain's navy building program was.

The 10,000 ton cruisers Surry and Northumberland were definitely cancelled the beginning of this week. The latest cancelled cruiser was the only one authorized by the Government upon which construction had not begun. Britain now has eleven 10,000 cruisers in operation and four more under construction.

While the curtailment of Britain's cruiser building program was welcomed in conference circles today, it contributed nothing toward the solution of the principal problem now before the delegates to the five-power treaty—the working out of a compromise between limitation by global tonnage or by categories.

As the majority of the chief delegates were enjoying their usual English week-end in the country, technical experts of the various delegations were busy studying the modified French proposal for global tonnage presented as a working basis for a compromise.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 1.—(INS)—Discovery of the frozen body of a war veteran lying in a snowbank near Fifth and Callowhill streets led police to raid the Berwyn Hotel nearby early today resulting in the arrest of 10 persons and seizure of a quantity of alleged high-powered beer.

Watching the Weather With Uncle Sam

A Series of Talks by Welby R. Stevens
(Assistant Weather Forecaster, U. S. Weather Bureau)

We shall tell you now about the organization of the forecast service which is the subject of the fourth talk of this series on weather forecasting.

As was emphasized previously, speed is a very important factor in weather predicting and the forecast work has been organized so as to give rapid and efficient public service.

To meet this need the United States has been divided into five districts. Within each district there is a certain station called the district center where the forecasts are issued for the entire district. These five centers are Washington, Chicago, New Orleans, Denver and San Francisco. There are also centers for limited and special service at Juneau, Alaska, San Juan, Porto Rico and Honolulu.

As soon as the forecast is completed for a certain State it is telegraphed immediately to every Weather Bureau station within that State. At practically every station there is a local forecaster, who amplifies the State forecast to meet local needs. In winter, for instance, he makes a forecast of the lowest temperature for the following night, or in summer, the highest temperature for the next day. These men must be thoroughly familiar with local topography and its effect on the weather in their vicinity. They must also keep in touch with local industries and their needs. For WAYNESBORO, Feb. 1.—(INS)—Barnes Lemley, postmaster at Ned in Greene County, near home, had a "new" surprise recently when a tabby cat jumped out of the mail sack he received from Deep Valley, another Greene County postoffice.

How the cat, a pet in the Deep Valley postoffice, managed to evade all of the first class mail regulations of Uncle Sam is a mystery.

Conjecturally speaking, it was a cold day and Tabby was sleepy and wished a warm place in which to snooze. The cat hopped or jumped or perhaps just crawled into the mail sack and slept through the journey over rough roads in the oldtime rural horse-drawn conveyance without a protest.

Or, more serious charges might be lodged against the cat. Perhaps, like Puss in Boots of old, Tabby had a yen for adventure and figured the best way to see the world would be under the protection of Uncle Sam.

CAMP FIRE GIRLS, INCLUDING LOCAL GROUP, ARE TO BE COMMENDED FOR SPLENDID WORK; IDEALS AND AIMS OF ORGANIZATION HIGH

Account of Forming of The Camp Fire Girls is Set Forth—Energy of The Girls is Directed in Many Splendid Fields of Activity

The enthusiasm of the Camp Fire Girls of Bristol is being noticed by many who come in contact with this splendid group of future homemakers, and their accomplishments as touching their own lives and those of others cannot help but cause commendatory words.

For the benefit of many who from time to time ask questions regarding this organization an account of the forming of the Camp Fire Girls unit is herewith set forth:

Those who have come into close contact with girls have probably noticed what a wealth of imagination and idealism they have, and how much energy they are able to devote to any activity which arouses their interest.

Here is motor power awaiting application. The question is, how to use it and to what end? This question troubled a group of men and women some eighteen or more years ago with the result they decided to use that energy in accomplishing the very things which girls want.

They wanted girls to have all the wholesome, healthy fun they could, to be admired and loved for admirable and lovable characteristics. They wanted to help the girls but this could never be done by teaching and preaching alone. What they needed was some means of directing their imagination and energy to the accomplishment of their ideals, some program of fun which shall nevertheless develop them spiritually, mentally and physically.

Back in 1911 when W. C. Langdon, of the Sage Foundation, was directing an historical pageant in Thetford, Vermont, he found that while the boys who were working with him were organized as Boy Scouts, the girls had no organization of their own and very much wanted one. He talked the matter over with Mrs. Charles H. Farnsworth, director of the Hanover Camps for girls at Thetford. They became enthusiastic over the idea and consulted with James West, of the Boy Scouts, and Dr. Luther Gulick, of the Sage Foundation. A meeting was called in 1911 to discuss the best way to meet the need. An organizing and executive committee was elected with full power to work out some adequate plan, with Dr. Mary Schenck Woolman as chairman. She was organizer and director of the Manhattan Trade School for Girls.

Among the specialists who helped in molding the program were: Dr. Anna

Brown, of the Young Women's Christian Association, with her interest in the health and spiritual happiness of girls; Miss Lina Beard, sister of Dan Beard, of the Boy Scouts, who emphasized the sturdy virtues of the pioneer; and Mr. and Mrs. Thompson-Seton, who stressed the value of primitive crafts and occupations, the love of outdoor life, and friendship with animals. Dr. Woolman and Mrs. Farnsworth planned and wrote the first manual. Dr. Langdon suggested the title, "Camp Fire Girls" and the ranks, Woodgatherer, Fire Maker and Torchbearer. Dr. and Mrs. Luther Gulick suggested a scheme of "honors" or awards for accomplishment which was modified and developed to form the Camp Fire Honor System. Dr. and Mrs. Gulick are responsible also for the ideals, ritual and use of symbolism, which so enrich the program. The name of their summer camp for girls, Wohelo (Work, Health, Love) became the watchword of the organization.

By the fall of 1911 there were Camp Fire Girls organized in many parts of the United States, and in October Dr. Luther Gulick was elected president of the Camp Fire Girls and in March, 1912, the movement was incorporated as a National Association. Today, eighteen years after incorporation of Camp Fire, there are Camp Fire groups in twenty-one different countries. Six hundred thousand girls have lived the Camp Fire program of work, health, love and service.

The Camp Fire program aims to train girls for their responsibilities, and to prepare them to meet those responsibilities easily and with understanding. The three ranks, Woodgatherer, Fire Maker and Torchbearer mark the stages in development of habits which are character-building instead of proficiency in certain tests.

Those who originated Camp Fire built truly on a sound foundation. The proof lies in the fact that the program has become increasingly usable during the years of its service. Its flexibility is probably one of its greatest assets, making it possible to adapt it to changing social and economic conditions and to incorporate in it the best of the new theories as recommended and tried out by educational and recreational experts. In a word Camp Fire is splendidly alive, its program constantly growing broader and more useful with an ever-expanding field of application.

BOTH H. S. FIVES CAPTURE VICTORIES

Boys Win Over Morrisville By the Score of 25 to 21

GIRLS WIN—34 TO 8

The High School quintet won its second consecutive game last night when it defeated the Morrisville Five in an exciting game staged in the high school "gym." At the sound of the final whistle the Cardinal and Gray was victor with the score 25-21.

This victory puts the local lads in line for first place in the league which they joined this season. In the first game of the season Bristol lost to Langhorne, Langhorne in turn lost to Morrisville and now as a result of last night's victory the teams are tied for first place.

It was a well earned victory for the Cardinal and Gray as the visitors were no chumps and showed skill in handling the ball. Watt got the first points for Bristol in the first few minutes of the game, but it was not long before Morrisville was leading in points. At half-time the score was 15-14 in Morrisville's favor.

Hughes was scoring ace for the visitors and he also capped high score

SEVENTEEN MEET DEATH IN AUTO ACCIDENTS IN JAN.

Patrolmen Urge Motor Vehicle Operators to Drive Cautiously

"Drive cautiously and stop killing people."

This is the dominant note in the data compiled at the South Langhorne barracks of the State Highway Patrol for the month of January.

"There have been 39 accidents in which 43 were injured and 17 persons killed on the Lincoln Highway, between Philadelphia city line and Morrisville, and between Morrisville and Andalusia on the Bristol Pike," says Corporal Harry Welsh.

Despite the vigilance of the patrolmen who are constantly patrolling these two main arteries of traffic, cautioning motorists to drive slowly, carefully, and to operate their automobiles in compliance with the state's motor laws, there continues to be a large number of individuals who apparently lose their good judgment when they get behind the wheel of a motor vehicle.

The total of 39 accidents in the month of January means an average of more than one a day, and many of these it is argued could have been avoided if the operators of the cars had driven cautiously. When the inspection of motor vehicles was completed practically every car on the highways was made safe to operate and in but few instances can any of the accidents be attributed to faulty mechanism.

"TRY THIS ON YOUR THREE-YEAR-OLD" By "The Stroller"

The above is the title of the portion of the talking news film featuring Walter Donald Hanns, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hanns, of Hulmeville, which is now appearing in theatres throughout the country.

The sub-title of this interesting bit of photography accompanied by the sound of the three-year-old's voice is "Donald Hanns resides in Hulmeville, Pa., and will soon spell it."

Donald's aptitude for spelling words of great length as well as dozens of shorter ones was first brought to the attention of the public a few weeks ago. Accounts of his skill were published in many newspapers and then representatives of a moving picture company made a trip to Hulmeville and took pictures of the tot, and he spelled for the talking films. Donald's mother is also featured, telling of the first steps her bright offspring took in this phase of knowledge.

Commencing today the news reel is being shown at the Fox Theatre, Philadelphia, and daily until February 6th. The Grand Theatre, here, will show same on the nights of February 17th and 18th.

DROP IN TRADE BALANCE

Foreign trade figures for 1929 reveal that exports in value failed to attain their year-to-year expansion though they probably equalled that growth in quantity because of lower prices. There is no cause in them for talking hard-times.

The increase in value was 2.3 per cent made possible through the remarkable spurt early in the year when the value of shipments rose 14 per cent in the first four months over the corresponding period of the preceding year. The final quarter of the year showed a decrease in value of exports of 10 per cent compared with the final quarter of 1928.

The year's exports of $5,248,483,000 gave the United States a favorable trade balance of $847,849,000, representing a setback of $189,063,000 from the 1928 balance.

Largely responsible for the drop in exports and increase in imports was the threat of a drastic boost in tariff rates which flooded the United States with foreign goods rushed across the waters to beat the tariff boost which did not come, and which provoked reciprocity moves abroad which reacted unfavorably against American exports.

While any recession in export trade is disturbing, the situation is not acute. Our trade balance is probably still too large for stability in world trade and there is no reason to believe that causes for the 1929 slump are permanent.

WOMEN WHO WORK

In these days of so-called equal rights and emancipation of women when no profession or occupation or public office is closed to womanhood, Miss Agnes L. Peterson, assistant director of the women's bureau of the department of labor, at Washington, is still unconvinced that any real advantage has been gained by her sex.

Her view of the situation is that chivalry is a myth, general relief for the employed woman from the drudgery of housework another cruel myth.

There are 8,500,000 women employed in 600 different occupations in the United States. Many of them have chosen business as a career, but the proportion gainfully employed because they had no alternative is probably far greater than idealizing feminists would have the public believe.

Marriage fails to bring a woman the economic security it formerly did. From a survey of 30,000 families in four cities it was found that 20 per cent of the women workers were the sole breadwinners. Matrimony in many thousands of cases means outside employment for the wife to make up the difference between the husband's earnings and the family budget.

Some of the more complex economic problems confronting women today are a serious challenge to the present social order. In contemplating the new economic status of womanhood it is important that its distressing aspects be not overlooked in the appraisal of its advantages.

To the ladies: An umbrella is a rain shield, not a harpoon.

Some people wouldn't enjoy giving a party except for the pleasure of not inviting somebody.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 1. (INS)—Revocation of the cards of 69 motorists and suspension of the driving privileges for 55 offenders was announced here today by the Bureau of Motor Vehicles for the week ending January 23. Restoration of driving rights to 42 drivers also was announced by the Bureau.

Revocations on the intoxication charge continued to hold the center of the stage. Drivers who lost their cards on this count included: John F. Buckley, Carbondale; S. D. Boyle and John Joo, of Beaver Falls; Daniel McDonald, of West Chester; Andy Todut, of Sharon; Damirak Rakansky, of Nanty Glo; R. J. Klingensmith, of Pittsburgh; William H. Brown, Edward Hemmicks, John J. Walsh and Frank J. Carson, all of Scranton;

Arthur Steffen, Hugh Stevin, James Russell, Graham W. Waddill, Charles Myers and Hermann Hansen, all of Philadelphia, and Charles Hartman, of Lebanon.

Of the 26 drivers to lose their driving rights because of a larceny charge, all but seven are Philadelphia residents. They are: Thomas Robinson, Douglass Stanley, Frank Eisenlohr, Robert Seltz, Jr., Michael Santapio, Melford Cornish, Allen Brown, Montreat Kennedy, Anthony Muni, Joseph Forte, James O'Brien, John Lewis, Peter Polo, Matthew Lichen, Norman Harrison, Henry Gilligan, Leon Proko, David R. Stubbs. Three Pittsburgh men were included in the larceny group, Don Battiste, Edward Waldron and Willis D. Carl.

Ten of the 55 suspensions meted out were for intoxication and of these all but two were non-residents of this State. The two were William J. Hart, of Kingston and John F. Mills, of Mercersburg.

Seven motorists, all but one being Philadelphia men, suffered the suspension penalty for driving without consent. They were: John Kelly, John Ferguson, Edgar Patterson, Richard Craig, Alexander Gasew, John O'Keefe.

Failure to file report and appear for a hearing caused seven drivers to have their cards suspended. Included were James J. Carr, of McKeesport; Earl Segraviss, of Hazleton; John F. ## SYNOPSIS

Joe Lane, ex-magillist and star songster of QRS Radio Station, discovers that Arthur Phillips, his manager and best friend, is trying to take Katherine, his wife, away from him. Becoming enraged he strikes his head and dies. Joe is being tried for murder. The case goes well for him until Little Pal, the Lane's four year old child, suddenly remarks that his "daddy was going to kill the man," thus establishing premeditation of murder. Joe gets a one year sentence on a manslaughter charge. In prison his cellmate tells him of the horrors and hardships of being an ex-convict.

He gave a bitter laugh, turning from the bars to look at his cell mate.

"Can't ya jus' hear th' biddies over th' back fence?" he jibed. "'A know what they say. 'I don't see what that Missus Jones gives herself airs fer—her husband's a jail bird.' Er, 'Ya oughtn't to let yer kids play with that Missus Jones' little boy. Ain't ya heard about her husband? Why, he saved a term in state's prison. I don't know what this here neighborhood's comin' to."

"Why, that's worse than takin' the rap!" Joe cut in. His mouth twisted in agony, and his eyes were staring.

"Yer right it is, buddy," the convict agreed grimly. "I'd rather be up here any time than facin' what my wife went through fer th' first self. Now, he must help not only himself, but the people he had wronged—his wife and his child. But how—what—

"If some day you should be on a new daddy's knee

Don't forget about me, Little Pal."

His voice trailed off into the silences. But those last two lines had made him see clearly what must be done. If his baby should ever belong to another father—that was it. It would be a terrible burden to carry through all the years to come. He was still young. He might reasonably expect to live for forty more years. Think what these six months had been without Katherine and Little Pal! What would six more months be? What would forty years be?

"Yer wife's as good as they come, all right," Joe's cell mate mumbled. "Ya don't often find 'em 'at way. She's a brick!"

"A brick!" Joe retorted with a flash of his old spirit. "Why, boy, she's a whole skyscraper."

"When she comin' up ta see ya again?" the man went on. He could see that his companion was troubled about something, and in his way he wanted to be kind, to help Joe to forget. And the one way he knew to do that was to get the song plunger talking about his wife and child.

"She'll be up next week, I think," Joe answered.

A shuffling noise of movement began in the cells. Men were stepping out of their prison suits, getting ready for the hard, narrow cots that stood close together in the narrow cells. Shoes thumped drearily onto the floor. Muffled sounds of bodies rolling wearily into bed, and then the lights suddenly went out and it was dark.

Joe sought his pillow. It was dark! There would never be any more light, ever. It had gone, all the brightness, and there were only four walls closing about him to shut out the sun.

"Say," he murmured huskily to his companion, "you sure did give me something to think about, buddy."

CHAPTER XI

It was visitors' day, and Joe knew that Katherine would come to see him. Pacing the long corridors of the prison wing he tried to prepare himself for the thing he felt that he must do.

But could he go through with it? There were some things that were beyond even human endurance to do. He must not think of himself. He must think of Katherine and what this would mean to her. And above all, he must think of Little Pal.

A guard came down the corridor in his direction. Joe stopped short. For one split second he was tempted to turn and run. Then he gritted his teeth and waited until the man called to him.

"Joe, your wife's waiting for you in the visitor's room."

Mechanically the singer stepped forward to follow the turnkey. Down to the end of the corridor they went. Massive iron doors swung open in answer to the giant keys the man carried jingling on a steel hoop. One, two, and finally a third. It seemed an age before the last door swung back. And then down at the end of a long and sunlit room he saw his wife.

As Joe entered Katherine turned and then came rushing to meet him, throwing her arms about his neck. The song plunger hesitated as she held up her face to him. Then he kissed her quickly.

"Oh, Joe!" Katherine exclaimed joyfully. "I'm so glad to see you. It seems months. How are you, dear?"

"I'm glad to see you, Kitty," Joe's voice sounded constrained and his wife glanced questioningly at him as he looked unnaturally. "Shall we sit down?"

"I left some things over here," Katherine began hurriedly, leading Joe towards one of the enclosures which filled the visiting room. A premonition of some coming event swept over her and she shivered.

Silently Joe allowed himself to be taken to the little square where Katherine had deposited several packages. All about them were other little squares marked off with waist high railings into small, padlock like spaces, each just big enough to hold four chairs uncomfortably.

"Just think," she went on, "you've got only one hundred and eighty-one and a half more days up here. I've counted them."

Joe made no comment on Katherine's remarks. Instead he merely nodded and then said: "You look fine. How's my Little Pal?"

"Oh, he's just great," she replied. "And he's doing so marvelously in school. His teachers say he's one of the brightest children they've ever had."

Hard as he tried, the song plunger couldn't keep up his air of cold reserve where Little Pal was concerned.

"I suppose he's learning to play ball, too?" he questioned eagerly. (To be continued)

State News

HARRISBURG, Feb. 1.—(INS)—Police of this capital city are faced with an apparently insoluble mystery—in a case which police describe as "a big time in a big way."

Charles Lesser, 45, of Dauphin, had such a big week-end, in fact, that he landed in jail twice within twenty-four hours, each time on a disorderly practice charge.

The first part of the mystery is easy. Charles was hospitably escorted to the battle for lambasting Floyd Raiser on a busy downtown corner.

Posting a $10 forfeit, Charles went on his way.

But here is the puzzling feature, Watson. Charles was found in a convulsively belligerent mood—strange, but true—in the corridor in the jail a short time after his departure.

Police are trying to figure out whether Lesser came back to finish the fight that had been interrupted or to get his former adversary out of jail.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Feb. 1.—(INS)—A new variety of the old time shell game was described here by two Bethlehem men who recently returned from a New York visit.

The men had made a trip to New York especially to see a Broadway hit much praised by critics and were disappointed when they were politely told at the box-office that the house was sold out. Disconsolately bemoaning their luck, they were approached by two attractive young women.

"I've just received word that my mother is ill," cried one of the girls. "If you want our seats I'll sell them to you for just what they cost—$13.50."

Inspection of the stubs satisfied the men that they were bonafide and they handed over the necessary cash. Once inside the theatre, they found that one of the seats called for by their stubs was occupied by a discomfited looking man.

He explained that he had given his seat stubs to his new "girl friend" for safekeeping and that she had stepped out "for a moment."

The Bethlehem men got the seats.

After having suffered two setbacks Mary Fine's sextet won from the Morrisville team 34-8. The girls received their blows while playing against George School, January 21, and Taylor Business College, January 24.

The game was long and hard to witness. The visiting guards made it rather hard for the local forwards to score. McFadden was high scorer, shooting 10 field goals and no fouls. At the end of the first half the score was 16-3 to Bristol's advantage. The second half was as uncolorful as the first, with Bristol continuing in the lead and outplaying the Morrisville six in every department.
